They have something to say...

These citizen scientists have big ideas - supported by research and data - about how to make our world more just, sustainable and resilient.

We need to listen.

The 2019 CELf Student Symposium brings together NYC schools participating in CELf's project-based learning program examining air quality issues in their neighborhoods. Families, community members, peers and policy makers have the opportunity to hear their findings, evaluate their solutions, and come together to make change happen. Join us!
